that cannot be overcome even in the best regulated stores when they are packed to suffocation with the shopping crowds, The newspaper advertising is what brings the crowds to a store. After they have come the advertising is not yet all done. Well-dressed windows have sold thousands of dellars' worth of goods in a single day, and there must be entertainment for the shoppers during their spare moments. One establishment spends enough every year on its music and other forms of entertainment during the holiday season to buy a first-class farm. The decoration of a single shop window has in many instances cost as much as a thousand dollars, and the man or woman who cannot get a suggestion from the daily papers and the shop windows is indeed hard to please.
